Max Lamar, crime specialist, receives a note from Chief of Police Alien informing him of the release of "Circle" Jim Borden, a notorious criminal, and asking him to keep a lookout for the man and his future activities. The name
"Circle" comes from the hereditary "red circle" which appears on the right and in each generation of the Bordens,
June Travis and her mother, two rested
in the reform of ex-convicts, are awaiting Borden's release. Borden refuses their aid, and is about to strike the persistent June, when Lamar comes up and deters
him.
Borden's son Ted, a good-for-nothing,
losses his position, and, desperate for want of money, is about to steal a man's watch, when his father comes upon him and pulls him away; the man raising a cry of thief.
Pursued by a large crowd, Lamar

ery of thief.

Pursued by a large crowd, Lamar among them, Borden and his hon reach a secret passageway to his rooms. Lamar learns from a boy playing nearby its exact location, and, sending the ind for aid, starts through the subterranean way.

for aid, starts through the subterraneau way.

Old Borden, brooding over the degradation of his son, seals the room in which the boy is asleep and turns on the gas. Lamar reaches the room, but his revolver is wrested from him by Borden, who tells Lamar he will annihilate the Borden family after he has killed the detective. Lamar escapes death at the hands of the fanatical Borden by the timely arrival of the police. Borden kills himself. The man has asphyxiated the son. Thinking that the circle-banded family is extinct. Lamar is surprised to see the Red Circle on the hand of a woman in a swiftly moving automobile. He manages to get the license number.

en the hand of a woman in a street and the license number.

Grant, a notorious loan shark, is locked in his vault and a batch of valuable notes are stolen.

Hastening to rotify the police, he finds his chauffeur and car to be missing. He reaches the police headquarters in a taxicab, and tells Chief of Police Allen of his loss. Lamar is present.

As they speak the missing car is seen passing—the same one that Lamar is interested in. They overtake the car, but occupant haw gone. The chauffeur shows a forged order for the car. The woman in black slinks into a nearby park and turns her coat inside out, exposing a dress and hat of white.

The woman in black is no other than June Travis. At home, she writes letters anonymously informing Grant's clientele of the destruction of the notes.

Mary, her old nurse, finds a piece of one of the notes.

offer in the office and show him the letters they have received thus freeing them from all obligation in him. Many confronts June with the note.

THIRD INSTALLMENT "Twenty Years Ago."

HE Red Circle! God help us! muttered the nurse once more as June looked at her, dazed, meredulous. The ray of garish sunlight that had streamed in at the open French window making a path of gold across the floor of the boudoir, lost its radiance. June, on her knees beside Mary, watched the light shrink and fade, The room suddenly became gray. She crept closer to her old nurse and threw her arms around her. Her right hand clutched the black-covered shoulder The whiteness of her flesh, against the black material, was intensified by the circle of scarlet. It glowed with a lurid brilliancy under her terrified gaze.

You know about the Red Circle? on't you please tell me?" she en-cated. "You must know, because I can see you recognize it. Don't you see how horrible it is for me Mary, won't you tell me?" nurse's arm tightened around the slim young body. Unconsciously she lapsed into the soothing, automatic patting that she had used so often to put the baby June to sleep.

Mrs. Clara K. E. Henkle. don't know, lamb. I don't know anything, precious, she stammered.

June drew back within the circle of her arms and looked at her reproachfully. "Dear, I know you so well!" she said. You can't lie to me. You are not the sort that is made to lie well, Mary, it shows so plainly in your eyes—anyone could see you think you are doing me a kindness to keep this secret from me-whatever it might be-but you're not. know how dearly you love me and ask you, on account of that love, to Won't you?" Trying desperately to evade the tor-rent of questionings, the nurse reached June looked after her, stunned by a wift, certain fear. Then, slowly she rose from her knees, walked over to her dressing table and sunk into the little chair before the mirror. For several seconds she stared blankly at a reflection before her, not realizing that it was hers. The eyes were dull and wide, the lips parted stupidly. Obedient to habit, she raised hand to smooth her disarranged hair -the mirror flashed back the red circle, on its white background.

At sight of it June jumped to her feet at sight of it Julie and the top of the stairway she stopped suddenly, leaning against the balustrade. On the low-er floor, in the library, sat her mother

Whatever the secret, it must be kept from her. Mary had made that clear. But what could the secret be that concerned June and not her mother? They had never had any important secrets from each other, they two. And yet—In a moment she had decided. Humming softly, she ran down the steps and into the library. Mrs. Travis looked up from her paper and smiled tenderly as the mischiever. from her paper and smiled tenderly as the mischievous face bent over her. "Still reading, munsie? Regular old bluestocking! Oh, only the newspaper— who's dead, dear Honestly, I can't find a thing of interest in the old dailies - except perhaps nows of the splendid work they're doing in the prisons. Politics and war news are so much Sanskrit to me. Where's Mary? Have you seen her? Where did she go?" "My darling girl"—Mrs. Travis raised her hands in mock horror, "will you ever cultivate the habit of waiting to have one question answered before you ask five others? Mary went through that door there into the garden, not ten minutes ago. Maybe she wants to run away from you and hide. I don't blame if you bombard her with questions I'm going to catch her."
